

Littlewood, when he makes use of an algebraic identity, always saves himself the trouble of proving it; he maintains that an identity, if true, can be verified in few lines by anybody obtuse enough to feel the need of verification.”

Freeman Dyson.